Read carefully the instructions given below, as well as the Instructions to Candidates document before you start on the project.

Project Tasks Candidate groups are required to work on a project that engages with either.

(A) the theme of ‘Equilibrium’

This project requires you to consider the importance of maintaining equilibrium in a particular area (e.g. in transportation, education, civil society, healthcare, business, etc.); or

(B) an area of interest chosen by the candidate group.

For the above two options, candidate groups may also draw ideas for their project from real-world problem statements made available to candidates through the Marketplace of Ideas (MOI).

Generic Project Requirements Project Work invites candidates to explore real-world issues that they wish to address. Candidates will identify a problem or an opportunity that they are interested in, consider multiple perspectives, appreciate the complexities that individuals and societies face, and propose ideas that would make a positive difference. During the course of the project, candidates are encouraged, both individually and as a group, to think inventively to generate a range of ideas and evaluate them to select and improve ideas that would address the problem or tap the opportunity identified.

For the project, candidates will need to:

- identify a problem or an opportunity in a real-world context that will enable them to make a positive difference;
- analyse the problem or opportunity;
- state clearly the aim of the project and identify the target group(s);
- conduct research and use research findings to support the choice of problem or opportunity and the proposed ideas;
- propose ideas to address the problem or to tap the opportunity identified; and
- analyse and evaluate the proposed ideas for their strengths and limitations.
